Justin Racz : J. Crewd before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised J. Crewd:

This tearful, joyous, gripping satirical examination of society's infatuation, nay addiction to catalogue shopping is an insightful, sociological commentary on our cultural trend towards an isolationist existence. I say bravo Mr. Racz on this risqué, cutting edge exposé serving as your first venture into the kingdom of authorship. The concrete walls that have imprisoned the literary community in the dark cell of imperturbable depravity come crumbling down with the passionate prose that flow effortlessly from the "stylo" of Racz. The precedent has been set and the bar has been raised. Mr. Racz comes roaring into the printed medium with a fury we have not seen since King or Grisham. The only comparable feat will be topping this tour-de-force in his next installment. 0 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Pure Unadulterated Genius By A Customer A literary

By A Customer It is rare these days to find political satire so on the mark that it leaves you gasping for breath after you've spent the first ten minutes laughing. Political satire is rare these days, and most of it is not very good. This is brilliant. From the first page to the last, from the Ted Kaczinsky bomber jacket to the J. Cloning baby farm (perhaps the best item in the whole "catalog"), this little booklet is the most outrageous and humorous look at social life since "Beyond the Fringe" satirized life in Britain during the early 1960's. It is a find, and it's going out to several of my friends as presents this holiday season.

J. Crewd is a wickedly funny satire on J. Crew, the twenty-something clothing catalogue for yuppies, preppies, and Winona Ryder-in-Reality Bites wannabes. Illustrated with 90210-ish models sporting leisure wear that would work equally well at a New Canaan barbecue, a night at the Viper Club, or a screening of Quentin Tarantino's latest film, this parody of today's fashions and fetishes is a hilarious social commentary on consumerism and contemporary taste. Featuring items such as "So Chill Chinos," real babies from the J. Cloning line ("From the womb to you, we don't just make babies, we forge families."), and the "Pleine-Air Boxer," the humor cuts a wide swath as it skewers our out-of-control consumer society. But as the J. Crewd philosophy goes, an overeducated customer is our best shopper. J. Crewd is a parody for all ages of sophisticated shoppers.
