Perhaps counter-intuitively, one of the common behaviours amongst comedians is discipline - doing the work. And the first part of that work is writing material. Regardless of their performing style, for many comedians, jokes are the building block of their act. New Zealand comedian Terry Williams set himself a task to publicly commit to the discipline of writing at least one joke a day and publishing it online for at least a year. This first book covers the first quarter of that year's worth of efforts. Humour is subjective at the best of times but the feedback was good and the likes and follows trended up and up. In response to those likers and followers, and their requests for those jokes in whatever passes for book-form these days, here it is. A class act... very funny". - Theatreview "Very polished". - macandmae "A unique brand of comedy that inspires as well as entertains, with wisdom among some well-woven tales. keepingupwithnz.com "He takes to the stage like a seasoned pro... some of the best punchlines Ive heard. Terrys superb comedic timing and innate ability to tell and build up a good story will have you hooked. His stories are engaging, well written and just downright funny". - Whimsical Banana "The sublime comedy styling of Terry Williams took over the night. It was truly a fantastic show, and the audience turned out in great numbers, and were red hot through the night". - Umar Rana, Comedy Masala Singapore "Not unlike a jovial Hughesy on The 7pm Project from across the ditch in Australia and has a charm of his own... remarkably good". - TheatreView More at: <http://www.terrywilliams.info/shows>

About the Author Terry's background is in corporate training and people management. Author of THE GUIDE: How to kiss, get a job and other stuff you need to know, that book has been acclaimed as a platform for people to reach the young people in their lives. And he wrote The Brain-Based Boss all about employee engagement, motivation and how to attract recruit and retain talent. Live Work Love was about how to add 10 quality years to your life. As seen on TV1s Good Morning and TV3s Sunrise, Terry Williams combines comedy with valuable business acumen to be a skilled and knowledgeable trainer, speaker or facilitator. Terry is also a former national league basketball player and a current professional stand-up comedian with several shows in the New Zealand International Comedy Festivals.
