His childhood should have received an A.S.B.O. , clearly not the sort of person that you would want as a neighbour. He is Frank and honest, but sometimes seems to exaggerate his stupidity. His story ends on a positive note and I applaud his achievements. Yes! I would welcome him into my neighbourhood. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. A delightful and witty collection of tales By Estelle Stevenson This collection of short stories is tied together with as being told from the unique point of view of a seasoned train commuter was a joy to read! Wonderful character descriptions and the author often had me giggling and laughing out loud through the tales of mischievousness and his own humorous thoughts! Would definitely recommend as it was an entertaining quick read filled with laughs and wonderful tidbits of travel and science! 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Whacky and Wonderful. By M.E. Wilson A whacky look at commuting that veers off into whacky childhood memories. Thoroughly enjoyed this book.

A mallard ate my mother! From Ghosts to the Galapagos; from Rocks to Rockets; and from Space to 'Spaced out'. Hilarious tales of commuting by train with each journey in turn leading to a new story. Our author is a commuter, suffering life's daily trials and tribulations as he struggles to and from work. In the end he finds it far easier to sit back, stare out of the window and reflect upon a life filled with adventure, mayhem, mystery and complete mischief. What people are saying:- 'Altogether an excellent, funny and at times very moving read' 'Bill Bryson meets Thomas the Tank Engine' 'An excellent, easy read, highly recommended' 'Fills a commute perfectly' 'A fun, naughty, smart, self-proclamation. Hopefully more to come?' 'I have read the book probably two or three times as I keep picking it up and re-reading a chapter or two. It is fabulous and refreshingly un-PC!' 'Every London commuter should read this' 'It's a wonder Julian is both still alive and/or not doing time at Wormwood Scrubs'

From the Author Julian Kirkman-Page has spent most of his working life commuting to and from London Bridge station. He lives in the South of England with his wife, and when not in the City or writing, spends much of his spare time either being in, on or under water, exploring the planet, or looking up at the night sky and wondering. He has two grown up daughters, three nieces, a grandson, and a sabre-toothed tiger called Scabby Fish-head. From the Back Cover A mallard ate my mother! and other stories. From Ghosts to the Galapagos; from Rocks to Rockets; and from Space to 'Spaced out'. Told from the perspective of a train commuter trying to study for a science degree whilst struggling with the trials and tribulations of a journey to and from London Bridge station, the author makes a humorous reflection upon a life filled with mystery, mischief and sheer madness; leading ultimately to a new journey into the unknown.
