Julian L'Estrange : The Big Book of National Insults: 1001 Xenophobic Quips and Quotes before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The Big Book of National Insults: 1001 Xenophobic Quips and Quotes:

Hail xenophobia! This is the anti-UN, a decided call against the brotherhood of nations, a poisonous feast of insults from one countryman to another. No nation is exempt: If anyone is born a German, God has sufficiently punished him, claim the Russians. "Every time Europe looks across the Atlantic to see the American eagle, it observes only the rear end of an ostrich," asserted writer H.G. Wells. And, Joan Rivers has something bad to say about the British: "Boy

George is all England needs-another queen who can't dress." Every toxic drop of rudeness is organized by the different areas of the world, then by nationality, and finally by theme. Krauts, Kangaroos, Polocks, Japs, Spics, Rooskies: all the epithets make their appearance. Amusing and scurrilous, this is not for the politically correct. But, don't worry--for every undiplomatic barb leveled your country you'll find just as many to throw back!

From Ann Robinson on the Welsh ('What are they for?') to Freud on the United States ('America is a mistake, a giant mistake') this is the perfect, politically incorrect, amusing and scurrilous gift book. About the Author Julian L'Estrange lives in Stoke Newington. His previous titles include Abroad: The Case Against.
